DEATH OF A GOOD MAN

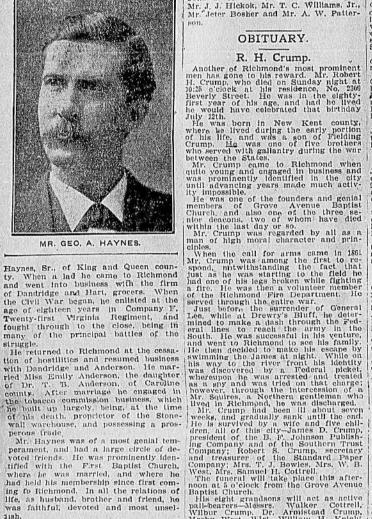

Mr. George A. Haynes Succumbs to Week's Severe Illness.

WARM-HEARTED GENTLEMAN

Was Universally Popular-Had Succeeded Well in Tobacco Business.

The death of Mr. George Anthony Haynes, one of the best known and most popular tobacco commission merchants in the city, occurred at his home, No. 12 South Third Street, at 9:30 o clock yes-

Mr. Haynes had been seriously ill for mere than a week and his death was not unexpected by his physicians, 'He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Emily Anderson Haynes; by his brother, Mr. Andrew L. Haynes, of the firm of McCarthy and Haynes; by his half-sister, Mrs. Bettic Moody, and his half-brother, Mr. J. Haynes, Jr. le was a son of the late John B.

He returned to Richmond at the cessa-tion of hostilities and resumed business with Dandridge and Anderson. He mar-ried Miss Emily Anderson, the daughter of Dr. T. B. Anderson, of Caroline counts. After marriage he engaged in the tobacco commission business, which he built up largely, being at the time of his death, proprietor of the Stone-wall warehouse, and possessing a pros-perous trade

Mr. Haynes was of a most genial temperament, and had a large circle of devoted friends. He was prominently identified with the First Baptist Church, where he was married, and where he had held his membership since first coming to Richmond. In all the relations of life, as husband, brother and friend, he was faithful, devoted and most unselved.

at 9 A. M.

The honorary pall-bearers will be: Mr.
John S. Ellett, Judge George L. Christian, Colonel Robert L. Maury, and James T. Parkinson.

AFFLICTED BY BLOOD POISON

FOERG'S REMEDY

Physicians marvel and praise. Sufferers wonder and rejoice.

A remarkable remedy for blood poison

Is an absolute, unfailing remedy for Blood Poison entitled to rank among the

We say no, unless it is a complete and perfect remedy, effecting a cure in every case of blood poisoning, whether constitutional or acquired. We did not aim at mere relief. There are other means of relief. We want to provide a permanent cure. relief. There are other There is no other means.

In Foerg's Remedy, have we a certain permanent cure? Physicians say we have, sufferers say we have. We have a countless mass of letters from them. They speak of many cures, but not of a single failure. Read this letter, one of an endless number:

"I have used six bottles of Feerg's Romedy for a case of blood disease of long standing, gave most everything recommended a trial, but without success, and by luck heard of Feerg Remedy, so I decided to give it a trial, which I did, and I am glad to say it completely cure in I am an acrobat, and recommended it to many of my profession, and hear of good result from all who take my advice. Wish you success and hope Foerg's Remedy will be standar amongst men of the future."

The writer of this letter is a well known athlete, whose name we withhold because all correspondence with our patrons is strictly confidential. We stake our commercial honor and standing on the statement that the letter is here faithfully reproduced. For many years we worked upon this problem. Other diseases, we reasoned, are curable. Why not this one? And so we continued our work until our efforts found the highest success, when we were ready to guarantee a cure in every case.
